

Dorothea Lange

May 26, 1895 – October 11, 1965

Lange studied photography under Clarence White at Columbia University in NYC. She eventually settled in San Francisco and opened a portrait studio, but also photographed the homeless of the area. This ultimately led to her employment with the Resettlement Administration, which became the Farm Security Administration, from 1935 to 1939.

Later, Lange worked for the War Relocation Authority, photographing the forced evacuation of Japanese Americans. She became faculty for the California School of Fine Arts and also co-founded Aperture, a photographic magazine still in print today.
