Narrative Description

(Describe the historic and current physical appearance and condition of the property. Describe contributing and noncontributing resources if applicable. Begin with a summary paragraph that briefly describes the general characteristics of the property, such as its location, type, style, method of construction, setting, size, and significant features. Indicate whether the property has historic integrity.)

Summary Paragraph

Located roughly two miles east of Asher, the Chisholm Springs Springhouse is in a rural area along Chism Creek in Pottawatomie County. [REDACTED]

[REDACTED] The surrounding property was overprinted by a now abandoned mid-twentieth century farmstead occupation. The stone springhouse is the only remaining feature of the mid-nineteenth century Chisholm Springs Trading Post, established and occupied by Jesse Chisholm from 1847 until 1861. Although the springhouse structure is in poor condition, it still maintains historic integrity including location, design, materials and workmanship.

Narrative Description

1) Springhouse, structure, circa 1846

The Chisholm Springs Springhouse is a simple, single-story, flat-roofed sandstone masonry structure constructed against the southeast-facing wall of a stone bluff. The structure has a sandstone and concrete foundation and was built over the spring, which continues to flow year-round. The sandstone masonry walls are between five and six feet in height, due to the slope of the terrain. The southwest-facing façade is sandstone masonry with a single opening (measuring two and a half feet in width for the full height of the walls) near the southern corner that serves as a doorway. The southeast side elevation is sandstone masonry with a single central opening (measuring five feet in width by two feet in height) that serves as a window. The northeast side elevation is sandstone masonry and contains no designed openings. Several stones in the lower courses, near the center of this elevation, have shifted or fallen. The northwest wall is sandstone masonry; this wall is only visible from the interior of the structure as it was constructed against the face of the natural stone conglomerate bluff. The height of the springhouse matches the height of the bluff at this location and the roof of the structure flows directly out from the top of the bluff.

The structure's original roof would likely have comprised log rafters and shake shingles; however, in 1958 the property owner (at that time) replaced the roof, adding a concrete support beam, two-inch by four-inch rafters, and tin sheathing. At the same time, much of the sandstone was repointed, a concrete foundation was added under the north and south walls, and a concrete lining was added around the spring.

Entering the structure through the entry opening in the southwest façade the interior face of each of the four unfinished sandstone walls are visible. In the northwest wall, which is not visible from the exterior of the structure, there is a small opening in the center of the wall at the base. This opening accommodates the spring. Portions of a wooden frame remain in place at this opening; other portions have become dislodged and are visible in the flooded interior of the springhouse. The interior walls in the northern corner of the structure are in the poorest condition, and the stones and the spring opening are being impacted by tree roots and cypress knees.

2) Archaeological Features, date undetermined.

Three archaeological features are present outside the springhouse structure itself. These include the following: (a) remnants of sandstone masonry along the portion of bluff face that extends south from the springhouse; (b) a low sandstone wall set out several feet from the base of the bluff that runs parallel to the bluff for sixteen feet then makes a ninety degree angled turn eastward and outward from the bluff for four additional feet before disappearing; and (c) one or more subterranean tanks immediately south of the springhouse's southern façade. The area southwest of the springhouse, including the subterranean tank, is flooded and has been impacted by the growth of cypress knees, but the rectangular shape of the tank is visible in the linear pattern of bright green moss that marks its edges. The construction dates and functions for each of these features are unknown.

Statement of Significance Summary Paragraph (Provide a summary paragraph that includes level of significance, applicable criteria, justification for the period of significance, and any applicable criteria considerations.)

The Chisholm Springs Springhouse is eligible for listing in the National Register of Historic Places at the local level under Criterion A for its association with Exploration and Settlement as the last remaining property associated with the mid-nineteenth century Chisholm Springs Trading Post. It is also eligible under Criterion D for its potential to yield information regarding springhouse construction and use in early settlement times in Oklahoma Territory. The period of significance aligns with the occupation of the Chisholm Springs Trading Post, extending from the date Jesse Chisholm constructed the springhouse in 1846 and established this trading post at the site in 1847, and ending when Chisholm closed the trading post and relocated to Kansas following the outbreak of the Civil War in 1861.

Narrative Statement of Significance (Provide at least one paragraph for each area of significance.)

Chisholm Springs, named for Jesse Chisholm, is situated one mile north of the South Canadian River at the site of a spring that runs year-round to this day. The availability of cold, fresh water provided by the spring would have been critical in the selection of this site. Springhouses are a form of vernacular architecture and served both as a source of fresh water and a means of refrigeration as the water from the spring would maintain a constant, cool temperature inside the structure.

Criterion A

The Chisholm Springs Trading Post represents the earliest American town and community settlement in Pottawatomie County and was the first of several trading posts established by Jesse Chisholm during the mid- to late-nineteenth century (Mooney 1971; McIntyre 1985; Hoig 1988). During the 1840s Jesse Chisholm, a man with Cherokee and Scottish ancestry, a frontiersman, trader, and polyglot, served as a guide, an interpreter, and a peacemaker for the United States government in Indian Territory (Hoig 1988, McIntyre 1985). Chisholm resided in a log cabin on the property; the Chisholm cabin was still standing in 1938 but is no longer extant at the site (Taylor 2014). The Chisholm Springs Trading Post included the trading post store, an adjoining blacksmith shop, and the springhouse (Mooney 1971).

In addition to its role as an early regional trading post, Chisholm Springs was also a stop along the 1849 California Road, the southern route used by gold rush settlers to reach California. Jesse Chisholm, himself, participated in negotiations with the Comanches in order to allow gold rush settlers safe passage through western Oklahoma (McIntyre 1985).

In 1861, following the outbreak of the Civil War, Jesse Chisholm closed the Chisholm Springs Trading Post and relocated to Kansas. He did not return to Chisholm Springs after the war

Name of Property

(Mooney 1971; McIntyre 1985). The Chisholm Springs Springhouse is the only remaining structure at the site of this early settlement.

The period of significance for the Chisholm Springs Springhouse is the property's fifteen-year period of occupation and use as a trading post beginning in 1846 with the establishment of Chisholm Springs and the construction of the springhouse, and ending in 1861, when Chisholm Springs was closed following the outbreak of the Civil War.

Criterion D

Although the larger property, surrounding the springhouse, has been overprinted and considerably disturbed by the twentieth century occupation at the site, the springhouse remains intact, and relatively undisturbed. A series of features extending south from the springhouse serve to highlight the intact nature of the property.

Archaeological investigations of the Chisholm Springs Springhouse can address multiple questions regarding nineteenth century springhouses.

- What is the orientation of tanks/reservoirs at the south end of the springhouse? And how does this orientation compare to other known springhouses in Indian Territory?
- How does the form/construction of the springhouse compare to other contemporaneous springhouses in Indian Territory?
- How was the Chisholm Springs Springhouse utilized during the nineteenth century occupation?

The Chisholm Springs Springhouse also has the potential to contain intact archaeological deposits in the immediate area of the springhouse that could provide important information regarding the nineteenth century trading post and homestead occupation.

- What was the purpose/function of the masonry along the bluff?
- What was the purpose/function of the sandstone wall?
- What kinds of goods were available or exchanged at the Chisholm Springs Trading Post?
- What communities were being served at this site?
- How do the types of artifacts at this site compare to other contemporaneous trading posts along the South Canadian River?

In conclusion, the Chisholm Springs Springhouse is the last remaining property associated with the Chisholm Springs Trading Post, the earliest American settlement in Pottawatomie County. Despite maintenance and modifications to portions of the structure in the 178 years since its construction in 1846, the Chisholm Springs Springhouse maintains integrity of location, design, materials, and workmanship, and is eligible for listing in the National Register at the regional level under Criterion A for its association with Exploration and Settlement and under Criterion D for its potential to yield archaeological information regarding springhouse construction and use in early settlement times in Oklahoma Territory.
